By Paul Herron

AS FAR AS the current issue of Time magazine is concerned, Allen Dulles, head of the Central Intelligence Agency, has the most important mission in the "long, sordid, heroic, and colorful history of the intelligence services." Conceivably, says Time, the pipe-smoking lawyer and brother of Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, has the responsibility once ascribed to Admiral Jellicoe, Admiral of the British Grand Fleet: "The only man on either side who could lose the war in an afternoon." Although modern weapons threaten whole nations and wars can be won and lost by miscalculations of strength, Time thinks Allen Dulles, who learned some of his cloak-and-dagger methods firsthand as an OSS agent in Europe, is gaining more and more respect for CIA.
